

The picture shows the structural connections that predict criticality in healthy controls (top), stroke patients at 3 months (middle) and 12 months (bottom) as determined by machine learning models. Each node belongs to a different network. The scatter plots show models' predictions and variance explained in relating structural connections to criticality. Importantly, criticality in patients improves over time in parallel to changes of structural connectivity and predicts behavioral recovery.